BEGINNING FILM STUDIES

Viva Books, 2010. Softcover. Book Condition: New. First edition. Both comprehensive and compact, Beginning film studies is a much needed introduction to the study of film, combining depth with clarity and scholarship with a lightness of touch. Written with verve and wit, it charts for new readers to the field the complex landscape of twentieth and twenty-first century film studies. As well as evaluating significant trends in the discipline's past and present, it suggests directions for film studies in the future when cinema will increasingly be challenged by other forms of visual culture. Beginning film studies is wide-ranging, moving outwards from detailed consideration of film stylistics to explore questions of narrative authorship, genre, the start and ideology. Later chapters on production and consumption assess the discipline's recent 'geographical' turn. Discussion is illustrated by references to film cultures as diverse as classical Hollywood, the French 'New Wave' and contemporary Hong Kong, India and Latin America; more than a little is said about Johnny Deep. The book is interactive throughout, with the reader encouraged to reflect critically upon each chapter's theories and methods and to apply these to his or her film viewing. Comprehensive lists of secondary reading and online materials make Beginning film studies the ideal resource for students keen to enter this dynamic subject. Contents: Introduction: what are film studies? ? From magic lanterns to videogames ? About this book ? Seeing film: mise-en-scène analysis ? Defining mise-en-scène ? Pro-filmic elements of mise-en-scène ? Cinematography ? Colour and its meanings ? Analysing mise-en-scène: In the Mood for Love ? Selected reading ? Useful websites ? Film editing: theories and histories ? Beyond the shot ? Principles and practices of continuity editing ? Continuity editing and its discontents ? Montage(s) ? Meanings of the jump cut ? Analysing editing: Strike and...
