Not illustrated. 1882 Excerpt: . . . and oftener than otherwise the little ones are forced by their overcareful parents to undergo such an amount of clothing, and tucking up in bed, as literally to constitute the dry pack, a sweating process, which, however desirable under certain conditions, is tolerable only for short intervals, being very depleting when long continued. It is impossible to intelligently consider this question apart from that of diet, so intimate is the connection between them. For example, the amount of clothing that would (HO) be appropriate when associated with a limited diet, would be altogether excessive for the child whose diet. was unrestricted. Horsemen understand this principle, at least in part, and in proportion as their stables are warm and their horses well blanketed, they effect a saving in hay and grain. Were they to feed as liberally under such circumstances, disease would surely result. However much we...
