Thaddeus Kuntz. Paperback. Condition: New. 218 pages. Dimensions: 8.5in. x 5.5in. x 0.5in. The stealthy religion interpreting familiar natural and social sciences is both inadequate and venomously misleading. To be human is to be religious. Even the most unprincipled animal of a person must arrive at life principles of some sort by religious thought. The power of deception is in the subtlety of it, and thus, the antidote is clear facts. Highly trained secular professionals and students are often lost in the details of a given study and fail to see the larger context of nature. This compact study reveals some powerful key facts and concepts about several of the most influential contemporary sciences providing an extraordinary and compelling vantage point. It can be used as a fascinating medium, to reach the multitudes of scientifically misled people saturating many of the modern cultures. The book is also organized as a serviceable study for educational classes with companion booklets available for students and teachers. The tone of Mised Minds is penetrating and persuasive in order to reach out to a disengaged secular audience, and yet it is quite practical for use in Christian schools and study groups. In this way the study can be digested within Christian circles and also circulated beyond with confidence. Within this resource a clear distinction is made between good scientific evolution and speculative Darwinism. Natural selection is scrutinized and defined with aggressive precision bringing it into agreement with known environments, mathematical probabilities, and established genetic principles ultimately revealing its complete lack of utility as a means of phyletic evolution. Also within this book some major influential models of psychology are reexamined and given vital context. A definite relationship is described between the mental and the spiritual leading the reader to appreciate the wisdom of purposefully designed human anatomy. The purpose of...
